

Preventing Accidents in High-risk Occupations

Why listen to Jack? As an explosives specialist, adventure television personality, and off-road racer, Jack has learned a thing or two about safety. Actually, three things, and if you manage people in higher-risk occupations, you need to know them too!

Companies use slogans for safety awareness, but if you want to stop accidents, it takes specific action every day. Any accident that does not happen prevents so many negative consequences and can save millions.

Stop Preventable Accidents by Learning

1. Jack's Bathtub Slope 300 Accident Factor

Statistically, there are two distinct times in a person's career when they are most likely to be in an accident, and statistically, we are 300 sketchy acts away from the next disaster.

2. Jack's Safety Cycle

There are three simple things we continually need to review to stay out of trouble.

3. Jack's Safety Trifecta

If we know what causes accidents, we can also prevent them! Jack has created three simple actions that we can enact now to stop virtually all preventable accidents.

"One of the most effective methods to stop accidents is to work in high-performance teams. The second is to recognize conditions that can lead up to accidents"

So Ya, Safety is Number 3!

Here is another number, three million, and you're welcome because that's the amount of money you can save by following Jack's advice.
